

Professor Anne McKnight (PhD Berkeley, Comparative Literature) teaches at University of California, Riverside, in the department of Comparative Literature, and heads the program in Japanese literature and other things at UCR. These “other things” include literature’s relation with cinema, media, history, food studies, the environment and ecology, technology and infrastructures, urban ethnography, critical theory and the intriguing worlds of research methods for literature and area studies. She has published essays and books on experimental film, the writer Nakagami Kenji, the film director Kurosawa Akira, the artist Rokudenashiko, and many others.